(33)—Hostile witness, who is not a - Contradiction in the whole texture of story—Effect.—The mere fact that, at a Sessions trial, a witness tells a different story from that told by him before the Magistrate, does not necessarily make him hostile. The proper inference to be drawn from contradictions in the whole texture of the story is not that the witness is hostile to this side or to that, but that the witness is one who ought not to be believed unless supported by other satisfactory evidence. KALACHAND SIRCAR v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, 13 C. 63.

(34)—Each party causing his opponent to be summoned as a witness — Objectionable.—It would appear that in India it is one of the artifices of a week and somewhat paltry kind of advocacy for each litigant to produce the opponent as a witness, and thus give the counsel for each litigant the opportunity of cross-examining his own client. It is a practice which their Lordships cannot help thinking all judicial tribunals ought to set themselves to render as abortive as it is objectionable. It ought never to be permitted in the result to embarrass judicial proceedings. KISHORI LAL v. CHUNI LAL, 5 M.L.T. 58, P.C.=9 C L.J. 172=13 C.W.N. 370=11 Bom. L.R. 196=31 A. 116=19 M. L.J. 186=1 Ind. EMPEROR v. CORPORAL ALLEN, 4 Ind. Cas. 400=10 Cr. L.J. 571.

(36)—Province of Court—S. 138, Evidence Act—Examination of witnesses.—It is not the province of the Court to examine the witnesses, unless the pleaders on either side have omitted to put any material question ; and the Court should generally leave the witnesses to the pleaders to be dealt with as laid down in s. 138 of the Evidence Act. The procedure of a Sessions Judge in questioning the witnesses, at the close of the examination in chief, at great length upon points, certain to be dealt with in cross-examination by the pleaders, is irregular and unfair. NOOR BUX KAZI v. EMPRESS, 6 C. 279=7 C.L R. 385.

Witness—concluded.

—4.—Miscellaneous Cases—concluded.

(37)—Examination of witnesses—Value to be attached to their testimony—Duty of prosecution to examine all important witnesses.—An elementary principle of sifting evidence is to test it in the light of probabilities. The piecemeal examination of the testimony of individual witnesses without a broad view of the facts, circumstances and probabilities of a case, generally leads to a failure of justice especially in a case where most of the witnesses are drawn from a class of persons whose testimony is frequently unconvincing and not unfrequently unreliable. Even if the witnesses in a case do not break down in cross-examination or do not contradict each other, yet, if their testimony is opposed to the ordinary course of human conduct and to the natural order of things, such testimony must be accepted with the greatest caution. The dividing of witnesses into two classes—Hindus and Mussalmans—and accepting the evidence of one class and rejecting that of the other, is open to severe criticism. The withholding of important witnesses, who were in one way or other intimately connected with the transaction or the occurrence and the state of things immediately after, gives rise to the irresistible inference that, if they had been examined, they would not have corroborated the prosecution story. NIBARAN CHANDRA ROY v. KING-EMPEROR, 11 C.W.N. 1085=6 Cr. L.J. 304.

(38)—Crim. Pro. Code, 1898, ss. 503 and 506—District Magistrate requiring subordinate trying Magistrate to examine witness at her house—Order illegal.—Where a District Magistrate, purporting to act under s. 503, Crim. Pro. Code, directs a Magistrate subordinate to him, before whom a case is pending, to examine a particular witness in her own house, held, that s. 503, which applies to commissions, could not apply to the present case, as the trying Magistrate is required to record the evidence. Even if it were to be construed as an order for examination by a Commissioner, the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to make such order except on a reference made to him under s. 506, Crim. Pro. Code, by the trying Magistrate. S. 503 applies only to cases pending before the Courts therein specified. IMPERATOR v. CHATO wd. PIRANO, 2 S.L.R. 8, Cr.=10 Cr.L.J. 211.

See WRONGFUL RESTRAINT.

(1)—Penal Code, s. 340—Wrongful confinement by police constable, what amounts to—Essentials of the offence.—The accused, a police head constable, detained some persons as suspects for several days. They were not fettered; but they were made to stay in a circumscribed limit. Their meals were brought to them, or police or village servants were sent with them to their houses for their meals and they were brought back. Held on these facts that the accused was guilty of wrongful confinement. Per Fulton, J.—To support a charge of wrongful confinement, proof of actual physical obstruction is not essential. It must be proved in each case that there was at least such an impression produced in the mind of the person confined as to lead him reasonably to believe that he was not free to depart and that he would be forthwith restrained if he attempted to do so. The mere threat of some future harm in case of departure will not suffice if such person knows that it is open to him to go away, and refrains from doing so lest he may suffer such harm. But if the circumstances are such as to justify and create the belief that he cannot depart without being seized immediately, then it would be proper to hold that he was obstructed and confined. (2)—Penal Code, s. 346—Offence under.—To render a person liable, under s. 346 of the Penal Code, it must be shown that the wrongful confinement was of such a nature as to indicate an intention that the person confined should not be discovered. In the matter of the

(3)—What constitutes.—The use of physical force is not a necessary ingredient of the offence of wrongful confinement. The mere detention of a person at a police station by moral force, exercised by the police or others guarding him, would be sufficient to constitute the offence. ACTING GOVERNMENT PLEADER v. VENKATACHALA MUDALI, 1 Weir 341.

(5)—Penal Code, ss. 79, 114 and 342—Wrongful confinement—Confinement in a cell of a prisoner in jail, whether illegal.—Confinement of a prisoner already undergoing imprisonment in a cell within the jail for the purpose of administering enema, against his will, and without legal authority, amounts to wrongful confinement and is not protected by s. 79, Penal Code. BAISTAB CHARAN SHAHA v. EMPEROR, 30 C. 95 = 6 C.W.N. 511.

(6)—Penal Code, ss. 340 and 342—Wrongful confinement—Power of Village Magistrate to arrest.—Where a Village Magistrate and a Village Kurnam directed the arrest of certain persons for resisting the detention of some pigs found trespassing, and two Police Officers acted in obedience to such an order and effected the arrest of the person, held, that, as there was no enactment which would authorise the Village Magistrate to order the arrest of the persons, both the Village Officers and the Constables were properly convicted of wrongful confinement. (6-a)—Penal Code, s. 342 — Unlawful imprisonment by policemen — Village Magistrate assisting policemen, effect of.—Assistance given by a village Magistrate, not in a judicial, but in an executive capacity, will not render an illegal custody legal. (7)—Consent of person wrongfully confined.—There can be no wrongful confinement when a desire to proceed has never existed, nor can a confinement be wrongful if it was consented to by the person affected. MUHAMMAD DIN v. EMPRESS, 36 P.R. 1895, Cr.

(8)—Penal Code, s. 452—Policemen acting under colour of his office and apparently in good faith—Whether he should be convicted, and if so, whether only on clear proof that his action was illegal.—Information of a cognizable and non-bailable offence was laid at the police station, and the applicant was deputed to investigate. The applicant did so, and, finding the offence proved arrested the accused (Po Thaw), handcuffed him in spite of protest, took him to the police station, and refused to release him on bail. The applicant was convicted of wrongful confinement, the ground of the conviction being that the accused had not committed the offence complained of but only a non-cognizable offence. Held that, when a policeman acts under colour of his office and apparently in good faith, he should not be convicted without clear proof that his action was illegal, and that, therefore, the conviction and sentence should be set aside. MAUNG AUNG DUN v. KING-EMPEROR, 14 Bur. L R. 258=8 Cr. L J. 424.

(9)—Penal Code, ss. 78, 79 and 349—Oral order as to custody of civil prisoner to bailiff—Bailiff giving prisoner in charge of process-server—Process-server detaining him in his house—Wrongful confinement — Civ. Pro. Code, ss. 478 and 481.—A person was arrested before judgment, on a warrant issued, under s. 478, Civ. Pro. Code, and was brought before the Court. The Judge did not issue any committal warrant, but orally ordered a bailiff to keep him in custody. The bailiff gave his prisoner in charge to a process-server, with oral orders to detain him. The process-server detained him in his own house till the Deputy Commissioner, on the complaint of that person's wife, ordered his release. The bailiff and the process-server were prosecuted and convicted of wrongful confinement, under s. 344, I.P.C. Held, that, as the law laid down in s. 481 of the Crim. Pro. Code, is that the Court may commit the defendant to jail,—and the form of order for committal is prescribed in the fourth schedule, No. 159—S. 78 of the Penal Code does not extend to the oral order of a Judge, that the mistake with the Judge, bailiff and process-server made in supposing that the warrant of arrest and the oral orders of the Judge and the bailiff were legal and justified the further detention of the man after he had been brought before the Court, was ignorance of the law as so laid down and a pure mistake of law and not of fact, and that, therefore, they were rightly convicted. MAUNG PU v. KING-EMPEROR, 4 L B.R. 253=8 Cr. L J. 68.

(10)—Crim. Pro. Code, s. 54—Cognizable offence committed outside British India—Power to arrest without warrant.—The word "offence" as used in s. 54 does not include acts of British subjects outside of British India, which if done in British India will amount to cognizable offences. A police officer is not, therefore, empowered to arrest, without a warrant, a British subject in British India on a charge of a cognizable offence committed outside British India. A police officer of the Sangli territory, an Independent State, came to Belgaum, with a written request from one of the chief officials to the chief constable to arrest the complainant, a Native Indian subject residing at Belgaum, on a charge of criminal breach of trust committed in the Sangli territory. The chief constable directed the arrest, which was performed by the Sangli officer, and the complainant was brought before the chief constable and showed him a letter for the District Magistrate of Belgaum to the effect that he could not be arrested without a warrant from either the Political Agent at Sangli or from the District Magistrate. Whereupon the chief constable brought the complainant before a Magistrate, who discharged him from custody. Held that, as the chief constable had no power to arrest without a warrant, he was guilty, under s. 342, Penal Code, of wrongful confinement. In re MUKUND BABU VETHE, 19 B. 72. [D., 7 Bom. (16)—Penal Code, ss. 52, 79, 99, 342—Private defence—Public servant acting in good faith, under colour of office—Arrest by police officer—Crim. Pro. Code, s. 54.—The accused, a police sepoy, was on duty at a temporary post near the Arthur Crawfor Market. His term of duty lasted from 4 to 7 A M. About 6-30, or between that time and 7, he saw the complainant there, carrying under his arm three pieces of cloth. Suspecting whether these cloths might not be stolen property, he went up to the complainant and began to question him about them. The complainant answered the questions apparently truthfully. One of the answers, however, was that the cloths were made in England. But the cloths bore Gujarathi names on them, and the accused, who did not know that such names were placed on English-made goods, presumed from this that the answer was a false one, and that the goods were stolen property. He did not, however, at once arrest the complainant, but took hold of one of the pieces of cloth in order to look at it more closely. The complainant objected to this and there was a scuffle, each trying to obtain possession of the cloth. After this, the accused arrested the complainant and took him to a European Inspector, to whom he narrated the facts, distinctly stating that he had arrested him because he had assaulted him. The Inspector on seeing that the complainant was an old man and on the accused saying that he was not hurt, let the complainant go. The Magistrate convicted the accused of wrongful confinement and sentenced him under s. 342, I.P.C. Held, on revision, that the conviction was wrong. The accused having an honest suspicion that the cloths may be stolen property, even though the same facts might not have raised any suspicion in the mind of a police officer of higher grade, had acted with due care in putting questions the answers to which might clear up his suspicions. The putting of questions, under these circumstances, was in itself an indication of good faith. Having received answers which did not satisfy him as to the honesty of the complainant, he was legally justified in detaining the cloth; and though he was entirely mistaken as to the character of the complainant, his belief as to his legal right was a bona fide belief, and he was protected by s. 79, I.P.C. Even though his act might not have been strictly justifiable by law, i.e., even though there might not have been a complete basis of facts to justify a reasonable suspicion that the cloth was stolen property, still the complainant had no right of private defence, as the accused was a public servant acting under colour of his office, and his act was not one which caused the apprehension of death or of grievous hurt. The complainant had no right to resist him, and he was, therefore, legally arrested under s. 54, Crim. Pro. Code. BHAWOO JIVAJI v.
